WebWorks ePublisher 2009.3 Release Adds Full Support for XSL-FO Standard

AUSTIN, Texas — November 17, 2009 — WebWorks.com, a brand of Quadralay Corporation, the leading developer of content conversion and deployment solutions for single- and multi-source delivery of online content, today announced the much-anticipated 2009.3 release of its industry-leading ePublisher platform.

Now content developers and corporate publication teams can apply the same degree of control and customization to their print documents that they have always been able to bring to their online deliverables, directly from within the ePublisher Pro design tool. By combining the intelligence needed for online delivery with the tight typography control needed for print, ePublisher now offers an unparalleled capability to convert content and deploy it to different destinations such as print, online help, mobile devices and wikis.

For existing ePublisher customers, the 2009.3 release includes a reduced footprint along with a faster and more automated installation process. 2009.3 brings a new level of upgrade security and backward compatibility with the ability to run publishing projects created on earlier versions of ePublisher right from with 2009.3.

ePublisher supports input from all versions of FrameMaker from version 6 upwards as well as input from Microsoft Word (up to and including Word 2007) and any DITA-XML compliant editor. Output to over 15 different delivery formats is available.

Existing WebWorks customers with active maintenance or subscription contracts will be automatically shipped a copy of ePublisher 2009.3 at no additional cost.
